

Natural Language Processing and Recommender systems

1. Explain natural language processing in your own words

Natural Language Processing or NLP is a field of Artificial Intelligence that gives the machines the ability to read, understand and derive meaning from human languages. It is a discipline that focuses on the interaction between data science and human language.

2. Discuss what is word embedding, lemmatization, stemming

Word Embedding

They are vector representations of a particular word. Word2Vec is a method to construct such an embedding. It can be obtained using two methods (both involving Neural Networks): Skip Gram and Common Bag Of Words (CBOW)

1. CBOW Model: This method takes the context of each word as the input and tries to predict the word corresponding to the context.
2. Skip Gram : We input the target word into the network. The model outputs C probability distributions. For each context position, we get C probability distributions of V probabilities, one for each word.

Lemmatization

In contrast to stemming, lemmatization looks beyond word reduction and considers a language's full vocabulary to apply a morphological analysis to words. The lemma of 'was' is 'be' and the lemma of 'mice' is 'mouse'. Lemmatization looks at surrounding text to determine a given word's part of speech, it does not categorize phrases.

Stemming

Stemming is the process of producing morphological variants of a root/base word. Stemming programs are commonly referred to as stemming algorithms or stemmers. Stemming is a somewhat crude method for cataloging related words; it essentially chops off letters from the end until the stem is reached. Stemming has its drawbacks. If given the token saw, stemming might always return saw, whereas lemmatization would likely return either see or saw depending on whether the use of the token was as a verb or a noun.

3. What is TF-IDF?

In information retrieval, TF-IDF short for term frequency-inverse document frequency, is a numerical statistic that is intended to reflect how important a word is to a document in a collection or corpus.

It is often used as a weighting factor in searches of information retrieval, text mining, and user modeling.

The tf-idf value increases proportionally to the number of times a word appears in the document and is offset by the number of documents in the corpus that contain the word, which helps to adjust for the fact that some words appear more frequently in general.

4. What do you mean by recommender systems?

Recommender systems are algorithms aimed at suggesting relevant items to users (items being movies to watch like in Netflix or products to buy like in Amazon).

5. Compare and Contrast content based vs collaborative recommender systems.

No.	Collaborative Recommendation Engine	Content Based Recommendation Engine
1.	A collaborative recommendation engine emphasizes on the user preference.	A content based recommendation engine emphasizes on the content features.
2.	In collaborative filtering, a recommendation engine requires the user profile to suggest relevant content.	In content based filtering, a recommendation system uses the content profile too which includes the content features.
3.	The collaborative recommendation systems feed on the user ratings, reviews, thumbs ups & downs, and other feedback on various products or services. So, the products with no ratings or feedback can't be recommended to any user. Neither a new user who hasn't given any reviews or ratings can get any recommendation by the collaborative recommendation engine. This is called the cold start problem.	The content-based recommendation systems are product features oriented and hence don't have such problems.
4.	A collaborative recommendation engine doesn't always ensure precise recommendations. Because the users with similar tastes may not like the same products always.	A content based recommendation engine can provide more accurate recommendations as it focuses on the features of the content a user likes.

6. Discuss any 3 similarity metrics.

1. Jaccard similarity:

Jaccard similarity is for comparing two binary vectors (sets). The Jaccard similarity turns out to be useful by detecting duplicates.

1. Cosine Similarity The cosine similarity calculates the cosine of the angle between two vectors.

$$s(\mathbf{x}, \mathbf{y}) = \frac{\mathbf{x} \cdot \mathbf{y}}{\|\mathbf{x}\| \|\mathbf{y}\|} = \frac{\sum_{i=0}^{n-1} x_i y_i}{\sqrt{\sum_{i=0}^{n-1} (x_i)^2} \times \sqrt{\sum_{i=0}^{n-1} (y_i)^2}}$$

1. Pearson's Correlation Correlation is a technique for investigating the relationship between two quantitative, continuous variables, for example, age and blood pressure. Pearson's correlation coefficient is a measure related to the strength and direction of a linear relationship.

$$CORR(\mathbf{x}, \mathbf{y}) = \frac{\sum_{i=1}^n (x_i - \bar{x})(y_i - \bar{y})}{\sqrt{\sum_{i=1}^n (x_i - \bar{x})^2} \sqrt{\sum_{i=1}^n (y_i - \bar{y})^2}}$$

7. What are sparse matrices and how do you create them in python?

A sparse matrix is a matrix that is comprised of mostly zero values. A matrix is sparse if many of its coefficients are zero.

Python's SciPy gives tools for creating sparse matrices using multiple data structures, as well as tools for converting a dense matrix to a sparse matrix. The function `csr_matrix()` is used to create a sparse matrix of compressed sparse row format whereas `csc_matrix()` is used to create a sparse matrix of compressed sparse column format.

In [3]: # Python program to create # sparse matrix using csr_matrix()

Import required package
import numpy as np
from scipy.sparse import csr_matrix

Creating a 3 * 4 sparse matrix
sparseMatrix = csr_matrix((3, 4), dtype = np.int8).toarray()

Print the sparse matrix
print(sparseMatrix)

you've got mail works alot better than it deserves to .
in order to make the film a success , all they had to do was cast two extremely popular and attractive stars , have them share the screen for about two hours and then collect the profits .
no real acting was involved and there is not an original or inventive bone in it's body (it's basically a complete re-shoot of the shop around the corner , only adding a few modern twists) .
essentially , it goes against and defies all concepts of good contemporary filmmaking .
it's overly sentimental and at times terribly mushy , not to mention very manipulative .

but oh , how enjoyable that manipulation is .
 but there must be something other than the casting and manipulation that makes the movie work as well as it does , because i absolutely hated the previous ryan/hanks teaming , sleepless in seattle .
 it couldn't have been the directing , because both films were helmed by the same woman .
 i haven't quite yet figured out what i liked so much about you've got mail , but then again , is that really important ?
 if you like something so much , why even question it ?
 again , the storyline is as cliched as they come .
 tom hanks plays joe fox , the insanely likeable owner of a discount book chain and meg ryan plays kathleen kelley , the even more insanely likeable proprietor of a family-run children's book shop called , in a nice homage , the shop around the corner .
 fox and kelley soon become bitter rivals because the new fox books store is opening up right across the block from the small business .
 little do they know , they are already in love with each other over the internet , only neither party knows the other person's true identity .
 the rest of the story isn't important because all it does is serve as a mere backdrop for the two stars to share the screen .
 sure , there are some mildly interesting subplots , but they all fail in comparison to the utter cuteness of the main relationship .
 all of this , of course , leads up to the predictable climax .
 but as foreseeable as the ending is , it's so damn cute and well-done that i doubt any movie in the entire year contains a scene that evokes as much pure joy as this part does .
 when ryan discovers the true identity of her online love , i was filled with such , for lack of a better word , happiness that for the first time all year , i actually left the theater smiling .

it is movies like these that make a jaded movie viewer thankful for the invention of the timex indiglo watch .
 based on the late 1960's television show by the same name , the mod squad tells the tale of three reformed criminals under the employ of the police to go undercover .
 however , things go wrong as evidence gets stolen and they are immediately under suspicion .
 of course , the ads make it seem like so much more .
 quick cuts , cool music , claire dane's nice hair and cute outfits , car chases , stuff blowing up , and the like .
 sounds like a cool movie , does it not ?
 after the first fifteen minutes , it quickly becomes apparent that it is not .
 the mod squad is certainly a slick looking production , complete with nice hair and costumes , but that simply isn't enough .
 the film is best described as a cross between an hour-long cop show and a music video , both stretched out into the span of an hour and a half .
 and with it comes every single cliché ?
 it doesn't really matter that the film is based on a television show , as most of the plot elements have been recycled from everything we've already seen .
 the characters and acting is nothing spectacular , sometimes even bordering on wooden .
 claire danes and omar epps deliver their lines as if they are bored , which really transfers onto the audience .
 the only one to escape relatively unscathed is giovanni ribisi , who plays the resident crazy man , ultimately being the only thing worth watching .
 unfortunately , even he's not enough to save this convoluted mess , as all the characters don't do much apart from occupying screen time .
 with the young cast , cool clothes , nice hair , and hip soundtrack , it appears that the film is geared towards the teenage mindset .
 despite an american 'r' rating (which the content does not justify) , the film is way too juvenile for the older mindset .

 information on the characters is literally spoon-fed to the audience (would it be that hard to show us instead of telling us ?) , dialogue is poorly written , and the plot is extremely predictable .
 the way the film progresses , you likely won't even care if the heroes are in any jeopardy , because you'll know they aren't .
 basing the show on a 1960's television show that nobody remembers is of questionable wisdom , especially when one considers the target audience and the fact that the number of memorable films based on television shows can be counted on one hand (even one that's missing a finger or two) .
 the number of times that i checked my watch (six) is a clear indication that this film is not one of them .
 it is clear that the film is nothing more than an attempt to cash in on the teenage spending dollar , judging from the rash of really awful teen-flicks that we've been seeing as of late .
 avoid this film at all costs .
